

Module 7

Procedures of the courts

People who are charged with provincial offences do not go to jail. They are charged a fine. Most provincial offences have a set fine and the maximum fine is indicated in the legislation.

When a subject is arrested on a criminal matter they must attend a bail hearing to see if they will be released from custody until their case is tried. If the subject is not released they will be remanded into custody in a provincial correctional facility.